Iroquois Club or via Zoom

Dr. Embekka Roberson

Superintendent, Birmingham Public Schools

“Building Stronger Communities with Birmingham Public Schools “

A dedicated educator with more than 25 years of experience, Dr. Embekka Roberson has been serving Birmingham Public Schools since 2008, assuming the role of Superintendent in 2021. Her extensive experience as an educator began in Detroit Public Schools as a devoted fourth-grade teacher. Having spanned all education levels, Roberson honed a holistic view of the educational landscape. During this time, she showcased leadership and a commitment to innovation, ensuring students and staff have the support and resources to thrive.

Roberson is unwaveringly committed to students and passionate about their success and well-being. She fosters a commitment to creating equitable, inclusive, and outstanding educational experiences. She believes that strong schools are built on strong communities, and she actively works to engage families, local organizations, and businesses in shaping a collaborative educational experience. By fostering meaningful partnerships, she ensures students excel academically and develop the skills and connections needed to thrive beyond the classroom.

As a lifelong student and believer in the transformative power of education, Roberson earned a Doctor of Education degree in Educational Leadership and Policy Studies from Wayne State University and aspires to continue learning each day.
